

NEW FALL COURSE!!

SOC 185S

Capitalism & Social Theory

Fall 2024

Dr. Daraka Larimore-Hall

Are you Capitalism-Curious, System-Suspicious or Desperately Seeking an Alternative?

Do you have burning questions about why the economy is structured the way it is, or how it has changed over time?

Do you sometimes wonder if capitalism seemed to work "better" for previous generations?

Mon. and Wed.

12:30-1:45pm

Phelps 1160

In SOC 185S, we will be exploring what a diverse range of social thinkers have said about these and many other questions. Starting with its emergence in the 18th Century, we will look at the rise, spread and many transformations of capitalist economic, social and cultural dimensions. Joining us will be critics, defenders, extrapolators, artists and other commentators who have sought to understand "the economy" as a critical aspect of human life. The course will include historical and contemporary work on the intersections of class, race, gender and sexuality, and will focus on how economic change is experienced by workers and consumers, as well as those left out of the system altogether.

The course is open to all majors.
