

NEW FALL COURSE!!

SOC 190A

Social Research for Labor Studies

Fall 2024

Dr. Daraka Larimore-Hall

Tuesdays, 11:30am-2:45pm

Room TBA

This seminar-style class is designed for existing or potential Labor Studies minors, though exceptions can be made. The core purpose of the class is to workshop and investigate possible undergraduate research topics related to labor studies. We will examine a range of scholarly, journalistic, artistic, historiographic and trade-union texts about work, workers and popular economics. Together with guest lectures about methodology, ideological assumptions, and the usefulness for various audiences, the class will serve as a narrow survey of the kinds of research that characterizes the multidisciplinary field of Labor Studies .

At the end of the quarter, students will be responsible for creating a series of "first draft" proposals for possible research topics and methodologies for undergraduate-led data collection and analysis. These proposals will be further developed by future sessions of this course.

This course is available through an add code